ABOUT THE OLD LIGHTHOUSE

THE PRESENT STONE TOWER'S RECORD AND HISTORY.

Word About Its Predecessor-The Old Dwelling-Captain Thompson's Long Official Service-Memories of the Wreck of the Chief Justice Marshal at South

One of the most picturesque spots in the vicinity of New Haven is the "Old Lighthouse," its adjacent buildings and the point on which they are located, Situated on the point at the eastern entrance of the harbor the white, stone tower rises abruptly from the surrounding rocks to the height of sixty feet. Here for over seventy years a light hung in the tower, a warning to the vessels of the dangerous reefs that abound and also a guld for those on their course. Every warm day crowds of people take advantage of the cool sea breeze, the opportunity offered for an outling during the day and gather at this spot. A few days since a "Courier" representative journeyed to the point and was warmly welcomed by the still hale Captain Elizur Thompson, now reaching his eighty-seventh year. In answer to the question for a short story of the place he answered in the affirmative and proceeded as follows:

"No," he exclaimed, "this is not the original structure. That was a small wooden tower built in 1804. It was about thirty-five feet high and the dwelling house used then is still doing service up the road a short distance. In 1845 the present stone tower was built, as also were the houses where we live. I did not come here till 1860, but have stayed her since then with the exception of two years. When Johnson was president they put me out, but Grant came then and I returned with him to the light. Eighteen years ago the new lighthouse was built and then they discontinued this one. My son, Henry Clay Thompson, now has charge of that one, while I work for the gov-ernment in this one. You know this is a station of the signal service of the war department and I have charge the tower. that when the British landed here during the Revolution one of their officers was shot and the old folks told me he was buried in under the pine tree next to the yard. Father used to live opposite the stone church in East Haven and in those days the children went barefoot to church and school Up there on Beacon Hill we used to all go and buy things from the peddlers, such as cider, ginger bread, etc. There used to be a foreigner who had a must rigged up there like a square-rigged ship to signal when a boat was on the sound. If it was a large ship he would raise the hogshead and for a brig a barrel would be holsted as a signal." Captain Thompson has two books that are exceedingly interesting to relie hunters. In 1849 when gold was discovered in California a party of twehty-four, including the captain, left this city in a schooner and sailed around Cape Horn up to San Francisco. The book of that boat now does service as a scrap book, where all interesting articles are pasted in for keeping. The other book is Dodd's register of East Haven, published in the year 1824. It contains a complete history of East Raven from 1644 to 1800. In the title page is the inscription: "Pubished for the author and sold by A H. Maltby & Co., No. 4 Glebe bullding. The author is Stephen Dodd, who was pastor of the East Haven Congrega-tional church about 1824. Captain Thompson has a complete list of births, marriages and deaths in the town The book bears the print of T. G. Wood ward & Co. On the page inside the over the following words are found in faded ink hardly visible: "Tradition has it that Benjamin Andrews on 10f page of marriages and births was a tory in the time of the Revolution and used to carry provisions to the enemy." "This book is not to be bought for ove or money," so says the captain. Captain Thompson well remembers when the Chief Justice Marshal, a Sound steamboat of big size in those days, drifted onto the rocks at South End and went to pieces. The steamer's steering gear gave out when she was near Faulkner's Island and the boat not being under control, drifted slowly but surely upon the rocks. The loss of life was small, the boat striking so near shore. The Marshal had been formerly a Hudson river boat. There was great excitement among the people for miles around when the news came that the Marshal was on the rocks. A few years Captain Charles H. Townshend of this city obtained of Captain Thompson a description of the scene at the wreck and employed an artist, who made from the description given a quite accurate picture of the wreck and of the shore adjacent from South End to the old light. A copy of the picture was presented by Captain Townshend to Captain Thompson, who prizes it highly.
